

Have you seen integrated government programs effectively improving lives in developing countries?

Can you help us to tell your story of success?

PATH, Action for Global Health, End Water Poverty, Tearfund and others are working together to produce a report to highlight opportunities to policy makers on taking a more joined-up approach to planning and implementing health, WASH, and nutrition strategies. We will showcase examples of integrated programs in several countries and tell a positive story about how integration and effective programming is moving forward. We will feature the voices of national leaders, civil society organizations, and other stakeholders.

The stories we want to tell will be snapshots rather than full case studies, and will feature your perspectives on what you are doing, what is working, and what is needed to sustain and/or scale up, i.e. guiding principles on what the policy makers, donors, and civil society can do to support integrated approaches.

We would like to use this opportunity to learn from your work and share it with others. The ideal examples will be of health, WASH, or nutrition projects from the public sector that integrate across those sectors or with other sectors. We are seeking examples of projects from urban or rural areas or those that focus on girls/women, and we would also welcome additional ideas about areas where integration between sectors has proved to be successful. While we are prioritizing public sector programs, we are interested to include examples from civil society projects as well.

The full report will feature several stories, photographs, and recommendations on what donors can do to support integration, and will be based on learning from all contributions.

By becoming involved, you will gain visibility for your work, access to models and practices from many others for you to improve your work, copies of the report for you to use in your own advocacy work, as well as giving others the opportunities to learn from what you have found to work best.

To contribute, please send us a half-page summary of the project, including your organization and its role, your role in the project/organization, the geographic location of the project, which sectors are integrated in the project and how, what you have learned, and what the current situation of the project is. Please send your suggestions to Hope Randall at hrrandall@path.org by March 7 and please include your contact information so that we can follow up with questions if need be.

Thank you for your interest, and we look forward to hearing from you.
